The Federal Skilled Worker Class (FSWC) program allows selection decision within 6 to 12 months of receipt of applications; a far-cry from the old system of 5 to 6 years.

At the onset of the new FSWC, 38 occupations were introduced. Because the labor market continues to evolve, the Canadian government and its provincial ministers are periodically evaluating these occupations. With this mandate, occupation/s may be added or deleted depending on the labor market demand. And so, on June 26, 2010, the list of qualifying occupation has been revised and reduced down to 29 with 11 new occupations added. Annual quota has also been imposed against this program.

To qualify for admission to Canada as a skilled worker, without an approved offer of employment, applicants must meet the following conditions:

- Possess at least one year of applicable experience in one of 29 high-demand occupations
- Score sufficient points under the skilled worker point grid
- Possess suitable settlement funding
- Undergo a successful security background and medical examination.
